The Rest of the World view of the practice landscape

The Rest of the World view of the practice landscape

Finding new knowledge and disseminating it to others

Clear research question Clear methods In depth understanding of previous knowledge.

Rigorously referenced.

How architects use research

Considered intrinsic to their work Project focused; client needs in particular Little use of external or public funding Mostly technical/ functional Post occupancy evaluation growing Some research into design theory, sociology & policy Broader research focusses on developing sector expertise Weak links to academic and other research organisations Potential for research as separate practice activity recognised
